

Public Policy Polling (PPP) is a U.S. polling firm based in Raleigh, North Carolina.^[1] PPP was founded in 2001 by businessman Dean Debnam, the firm's current president and Chief Executive Officer.^[2] PPP's polls have been described as "Democratic-leaning"^[3] and "accurate."^[4] It is labeled as a Democratic firm because in its private client work, it conducts polls only for Democratic campaigns and progressive organizations. The company is known for asking unexpected and unusual questions, including those without bearing on politics, such as the approval rating of God^[5] and the ratio of voters who believe President Obama would be eligible for entering heaven in the event of the Rapture.^[6] Many of these questions come from suggestions by PPP readers on the company's blog.

The American public holds differing beliefs on many conspiracy theories involving issues such as global warming and the Iraq War. It also holds differing beliefs on more bizarre conspiracy theories.

PPP surveyed 1,247 registered American voters from March 27th to March 30th, 2013. The margin of error for the overall sample was $\pm 2.8\%$.

The poll was not paid for nor authorized by any campaign or political organization. This poll, like all PPP polls, was conducted through automated telephone interviews.

Questions 1-20 deal with a range of conspiracy theories. Questions 21-26 deal with demographic characteristics of responders. The exact questions asked of the responders are as stated in the text.

Following the questions and their responses, PPP ran a series of cross-tabulations dealing with conspiracy beliefs held by varying demographic characteristics.

My Reactions

My good friend John Grassilli talks about what happens when a person realizes that a large number of his or her fellow humans are incredibly stupid. "Species Identification Crisis Syndrome" sets in wherein that person struggles with the realization that he or she is actually one of THEM. Looking at the ALL column in #12 above, for example, consider that 9% are believers while 17% are not sure. That means that 26% of people can be thought of as thinking something like "Hmm, maybe" So, next time you shop at the mall, think that roughly 1 out of every 4 people you pass lend some degree of credibility to the fluoride plot. I do not want to review the lizard people (roughly 1 in 10?).
